MEASURING GUIDE

We always recommend getting measured by a professional, but when that's not possible, use this guide to help you get the best measurements possible. Always use a soft measuring tape, and when possible, have someone else take the measurements for you. This is a two person job. The measurements should not be uncomfortably tight, but there should not be slack in the tape.

Coat

Height

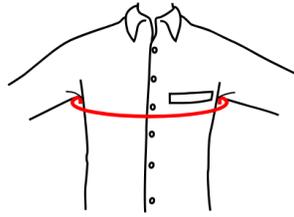

If you don't already know your height, measure from the top of the head to the floor (without shoes) – this is your height.

Weight

If you have a scale, use it as you normally would and record the weight provided by the device. If you do not have access to a scale at home, you can estimate by using your last recorded weight and take into consideration any changes your body has gone through since that time.

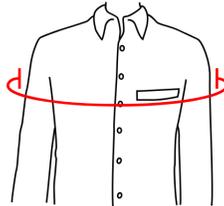

Chest

Have a friend wrap a measuring tape around the widest part of your chest and back, under your arms.

Overarm

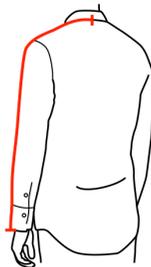

Measure over the arms, across the largest part of chest and upper arms.

Shirt

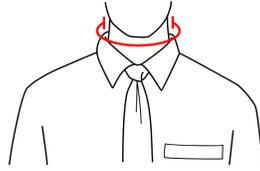

Sleeve

Have a friend begin at the nape (center of the back of your neck) and guide the measuring tape out over your shoulder and down the outer edge of your arm, stopping just past your wrist bone. Record this as your sleeve length.

Neck

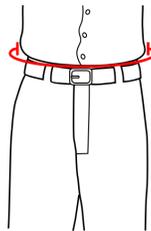

Place tape around neck at the level the collar would be buttoned. Place one finger between the neck and make sure the tape is snug but moves freely.

Pants

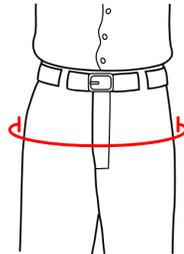

Waist

Take off your belt, and measure snugly around your waist where your pants normally sit.

Hips

Measure around the widest part of your hips and buttocks. Sounds weird, but it helps.

Outseam

Looking straight ahead, place the start of tape at the side of waist at the navel level. Stretch tape down side of length until you reach the top heel of the dress shoe or to desired length of pant.
